Debussy disapproved of Nijinsky's 1912 choreography for Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune, perceiving dissonance between his fluid melodies and Nijinsky's angular, two-dimensional poses. Because of the patent differences between the music and choreography, commentary on the work has focused primarily on what makes the ballet and music distinct instead of how the ballet might transform ...

recognized. Scientific improvements of the new century sprang up independent of any special war-stimulated research. Chemistry made tremendous strides during the century, though there was a lag before most of the new discoveries affected military technology in any way. Most of the common modern explosives were discovered in the nineteenth century.
