systems that are inherently agent oriented. Specifying the behavioural aspects of the agents in a system up front pro-vide all the bene ts of specifying the behaviour of a system as a whole. 2.4 Domain Modelling Because information systems are embedded in real business environments the speci cation of those systems is contextu-

Towards Reuse in Agent Oriented Information Systems: The

The emerging field of agent-oriented information systems (AOIS) views data as the central focus of an application while providing an overall framework for deriving system architecture. Combining object-oriented data modeling, a persistent programming language and an agent-oriented analysis and design methodology, we achieve key goals of simulation

HETEROGENOUS DATABASE INTEGRATION USING AGENT- ORIENTED

The above design utilizes some principles of agent-oriented information systems. Each agent (student or teacher) is an information system, collecting, transferring and processing data and information. The teacher agent ranks the student agents based on the information it receives from them.
