The "Thraco-Macedonian" coins bearing the kneeling bull type have been previously assigned a variety of attributions. It would appear, however, that, despite having the same type, these coins should be attributed to a number of distinct sources, as is the case of other series with the same type from this region.

Alexandros Reginald Tzamalīs | Université Paris-Sorbonne

The history of the ethnic Macedonians has been shaped by population shifts and political developments in the southern Balkans, especially within the region of Macedonia. The ideas of separate Macedonian identity grew in significance after the First World War, both in Vardar Macedonia and among the left-leaning diaspora in Bulgaria, and were endorsed by the Comintern.
