Atmospheric Degradation of Volatile Organic Compounds

Aerosols are considered major players in climate change and represent health hazards. Dicarboxylic acids are among a major class of components that form secondary organic atmospheric aerosols.

Enhanced PDF; Standard PDF (177.4 KB) 1. Introduction [2] Aerosols are considered major players in climate change and represent health hazards [Heintzenberg, 1989; Jacobson et al., 2000]. Organic compounds can represent up to 60% of the tropospheric aerosol mass formed through biogenic or anthropogenic activities.

Book review/Environmental Engineering and Management Journal 6 (2007), 3, 253-254 254 The final chapter of this book, Table of Reaction Rate Constants of Photo-Degradation Processes, contains a list of 1100 volatile, semi-volatile organic and some inorganic substances,

ATMOSPHERIC DEGRADATION OF ORGANIC SUBSTANCES Data for

organic acids to form essentially non-volatile organic salts and/or the reactive uptake of gas phase amines into liquid droplets and subsequent formation of organic salts in the particulate phase are the likely mechanisms.

Atmospheric Degradation of Amines (ADA) - NILU

The paper reports the use of atmospheric non-thermal plasma torch as a catalyst for degradation of various organic pollutants dissolved in water.

Effective degradation of organic water pollutants by

A method of plasma treatment in which a glow discharge was generated in the small gas gap between an electrode and a water surface was designed and employed in this study. By using this method, many active species were generated on the wastewater surface to degrade organic pollutants. The electric ...

Klöpffer / Wagner: Atmospheric Degradation of Organic Substances (3-527-31606-X) "This book is an important publication at the right time. It provides a valuable compilation of existing data and, at the same time, points out the need for more and innovative research in the field of atmospheric reactivity of organic chemicals. ...

of atmospheric carbon dioxide. Since these imbalances depend on degradation as well as primary production, so too do both primary production and organic matter degradation determine the net contribution of the biota to fluxes of carbon dioxide to and from the atmosphere.
