growth is not well understood. However, research into biofertilizer is in-creasing, attempting to deal with these issues. Research needs also to be conducted to determine if and how variations in soil type, management practices, and weather affect biofertilizer efficacy. Furthermore, there is a block in biofertilizer development.

In India, the production of bio-fertilizers on commercial scale was started only during late 1960s when yellow seeded soybean was introduced for the first time. Recognition of Indian peat as suitable carrier for production of bio-fertilizer in 1969 further augmented, the growth of bio-fertilizer industry in India.

Production of Various Bio-Fertilizers | Microbiology

Biofertilizers offer a new technology to Indian agriculture holding a promise to balance many of the shortcomings of the conventional chemical based technology. It is a product that is likely to be commercially promising in the long run once information becomes available adequately to producers and farmers through experience and communication.
