signaling chain in the interior of the cell. In such signaling path-ways, the membrane-bound receptor transduces the signal at the cell membrane so that it is not necessary for the signal to actually enter the cell. " The messenger enters into the target cell and binds and activates the receptor localized in the cytosol or nucleus.

To date, most of the published research in the field of single-molecule processes in cells, focus on the dynamic properties (translational movements of the centre of mass) of biological molecules. However, we hope that this book presents as many kinetic analyses of cell signaling as possible.
