Hence, by measuring the yield of chlorophyll fluorescence, information about changes in the efficiency of photochemistry and heat dissipation can be gained. Although the total amount of chlorophyll fluorescence is very small (only 1 or 2% of total light absorbed), measurement is quite easy.

5.1.3 Chlorophyll Fluorescence Changes during Sulfur Starvation. The chlorophyll fluorescence measurement is considered to be a useful tool to monitor photosynthetic activity. It is commonly used to evaluate the effect of different kinds of stresses on the photosynthetic apparatus.
