Increasing Colorectal Cancer Screening in Health Care

Colorectal cancer is a disease of middle and old age, therefore the costs related to colorectal cancer treatment are likely to increase as the population ages. Hospital admissions for colorectal cancer are expected to double by 2050. The estimated annual national expenditure for colorectal cancer treatment is $5.5-$6.5 billion.

Evidence Based Guidelines: To Improve Colorectal Cancer

Colorectal cancer (CRC) is the third most common cancer diagnosed in both men and women in the United States.<sup>1</sup> NPs face challenges in explaining the role of cancer detection strategies for CRC and implementing screening strategies appropriately. Understanding the epidemiology of CRC, known risk factors, the benefits and limitations of CRC screening modalities, and evidence-based recommendations is important to select appropriate screening for patients based on age and risk assessment.

Colorectal cancer screening: Using evidence-based

The Evidence-Based Cancer Prevention Services Colorectal Cancer Prevention Coalition (EBP-CRC) award mechanism seeks to fund projects that greatly challenge the status quo in colorectal cancer prevention and control services.
