

crying the natural and pdf

Crying offers a kind of smorgasbord of just about everything known about human tears from the disciplines of anthropology, literature, psychology, philosophy, history, physiology, and biochemistry. Tom Lutz is generous with examples drawn from literature and art--topics that were poorly represented in prior, book-length studies of the subject--and he goes far beyond any of his predecessors in the ease and sophistication with which he presents contemporary ideas from biochemistry and physiology.

The Meaning of Crying Based on Attachment Theory

For example, crying due to a loss is a message to the outside world that pleads for help with coping with internal sufferings. Or, as Arthur Schopenhauer suggested, sorrowful crying is a method of self-pity or self-regard, a way one comforts oneself. Joyful crying, in contrast, is in recognition of beauty, glory, or wonderfulness.
