To get the marginal of the first variable, we sum or integrate out the second variable, and to get the marginal of the second variable, we do the same to the first variable. The marginals are univariate probability density functions and represent the distributions of each variable separately, regardless of the value of the other.

Borehole thermal methods have been applied in geothermal exploration, but have seldom been used in mineral exploration. However, this method has potential usefulness in exploration and in geoenvironmental investigations (Ovnatanov and Tamrazyan, 1970; Brown and others, 1980; Zielinski and others, 1983; Houseman and others, 1989).

and enhancing vectoring capabilities. Conventional geochemistry remains very important to gold exploration, while promising new techniques are being tested. Selection of the appropriate exploration methods must be dictated by the characteristics of the targeted model, its geologic setting, and the surficial environment.
