Many types of fish migrate on a regular basis, on time scales ranging from daily to annually or longer, and over distances ranging from a few metres to thousands of kilometres. Fish usually migrate to feed or to reproduce, but in other cases the reasons are unclear. Migrations involve the fish moving from one part of a water body to another on a regular basis.

Water is not the rarest element on Earth, but it is our most precious natural resource because every terrestrial life form—plant, animal and human—depends on H₂O for survival. Most people know that water covers about two-thirds of the entire planet's surface, but fewer are aware that most of that is saltwater, and only about 2.5 percent is freshwater suitable for drinking and growing food.

The Hudson estuary also hosts many migratory fishes. The river's signature species - Atlantic sturgeon, American shad, and striped bass - live the first few months or years of their lives in fresh water before swimming out into the Atlantic to mature. As adults they will return to the river only to spawn. The American eel does the opposite; born in the ocean, it enters fresh water to grow to ...
