Unfortunately, Courtney caught a cold on the way back home so while she was resting this weekend I took it upon myself to start a new project that was inexpensive and quick to put together (if you don't count waiting for the concrete to dry). I had fun experimenting and making these DIY concrete planters to display around the house.

We took a walk on the wild side last week featuring homes painted a bold orange color; this week we're dialing it down a bit by showcasing a more subtle hue that's neither too hot nor too cold. A warm gray is just right for any style of home, and it's a great option for those who don't want to rock the boat with neighbors or a homeowners association.
