Identity Technologies Constructing The Self Online

How have new media technologies impacted the ways we construct ourselves online? This is the central question explored in the anthology Identity Technologies: Constructing the Self Online, edited by Anna Poletti and Julie Rak. The book is a welcome contribution to the study of online identity because it includes classic reprinted texts that allow us to think back on central questions that have evolved over time, current empirical research, and reflections from leading scholars.

digital identity develops in relation to digital community in ways that are continuous with offline communities: we find that identity in the context of digital communities is a result of both "interior process" and "relationships that contribute to the creation of an interwoven fabric of ontological stories" (Micalizzi 218).

Anna Poletti and Julie Rak, editors. Identity Technologies

In their introduction to Identity Technologies, editors Anna Poletti and Julie Rak describe their new anthology as an "experiment in interdisciplinary dialogue" (3). Indeed, that experimental spirit persists throughout the text, from meditations on the history of cyber-race and identity tourism to reflections on the connections between Internet writing and the print diary.
