probabilistic properties and the inner product structures on a Banach space. We present results which show that when a Banach space has some properties - for example, certain martingale results hold, or when the central limit theorem is valid, etc. - then the norm (or an equivalent norm) is generated by an inner product. 9.1.

The two operations: multiplication and inner product, needed to define string field theory action, can be written in terms of 3- and 2-string vertices. Here we will present only the vertices for the bosonized ghosts. The ones for the matter part can be found, for example in [20, 21, 22].

We can give CG(and hence CGG) the L2 inner product,  $\langle f, g \rangle = \int G f(g) f 2(g) dg$ : Under this inner product, we proved the following orthogonality relation for characters. Theorem 2.2. Let  $T_1$  and  $T_2$  be irreducible representations with characters  $\chi_1$  and  $\chi_2$ . Then  $\langle \chi_1, \chi_2 \rangle = 1$  if  $T_1 \cong T_2$ , 0 if  $T_1 \not\cong T_2$ . Another big result of the compact theory is the Peter-Weyl theorem.

Inner product spaces generalize Euclidean spaces (in which the inner product is the dot product, also known as the scalar product) to vector spaces of any (possibly infinite) dimension, and are studied in functional analysis. The first usage of the concept of a vector space with an inner product is due to Peano, in 1898.
