TRENDS in Molecular Medicine mRNA Figure 1. Biogenesis and function of microRNAs, and their dysregulation in cancer. MicroRNAs are transcribed by RNA polymerase II. The resulting primary microRNA transcript is cleaved in the nucleus by a complex involving Drosha and DGCR8 microprocessor complex subunit (DGCR8), forming what is termed a ...

Lung cancer is the most common cause of cancer-associated death worldwide. Postoperative relapse and subsequent metastasis result in a high mortality rate, even in early stage lung cancer. MicroRNAs (miRNAs) are small non-coding RNAs that regulate gene expression at the post-transcriptional level and are frequently dysregulated in various cancers.

The discovery of non-coding RNAs has provided new insight into the mechanisms that underpin human congenital and acquired diseases. This review will focus in microRNAs (miRs) and congenital heart disease (CHD). miRs are small, evolutionally conserved, non-coding RNA molecules which have been shown to negatively regulate gene expression . Initially identified in animals they are now recognised to be widely distributed in the eukaryotic kingdom and are commonly found in vertebrates.

Here, we summarise current knowledge about the role of miRNAs in immunology and transplantation medicine and their role as potential biomarkers. We also focus on the molecular mechanisms and therapeutic implications of the use of miRNA-based therapeutic strategies to improve long-term allograft survival.
