TRANSMISSION OF MILLIMETER RADIO WAVES IN OVER WATER DUCTS modified index of refraction is introduced which relates to the path of a ray to a flat earth. This modified refractive index, M , is given by $M = 0.16h + (n-1) \times 10^{-183}$ when n is the actual index-of-refraction and h is the height in meters above the sea surface.

Modern single-mode microwave technology allows the performance of MAOS in very small reaction volumes (<0.2 mL). With today's commercially available single-mode cavities, the largest volumes that can be processed under sealed-vessel conditions are c . 50 mL, with different vessel types being available to upscale in a linear fashion from 0.05 to 50 mL (see Figures 5 and 7).
