1.1.2 Electrophysiology of a neuron: The basis of electrical signaling in a neuron is the fact that there is voltage difference between the interior of the neuron relative to the space surrounding the neuron, the extracellular space. This voltage, known as the membrane potential, is a constant (of about 70 mV) in resting
- conditions.

Chapter 1 1.1 Neuron: Structure and Function

A single neuron can't do very much by itself, and nervous system function depends on groups of neurons that work together. Individual neurons connect to other neurons to stimulate or inhibit their activity, forming circuits that can process incoming information and carry out a response.
