The frequency of nonlinear free oscillations is investigated in the following one-dimensional situations: (1) cold plasma including ion motion; (2) plasma with a spread in the velocity distribution; and (3) the two-stream case. In each case a dependence of the frequency on the degree of nonlinearity is obtained.

The modulational instability of finite amplitude, longitudinal, nonlinear plasma oscillations in a cold plasma is discussed. Stable and unstable regimes appear alternatively as the wave nonlinear parameter  $\hat{\mu}$  varies. A possible laboratory experiment that may confirm this result is suggested.
