Most carbonate rocks contain insoluble residue to various extent, whereby the clay-content forms the basis for a classification of the limestones (Correns, 1939, p. 200). Rocks with a clay mineral content of up to 25% are hereby designated as limestones.

he notes the presence of two limestones and designates the associated coals as "No. 3 and 3a," which would indicate that he regarded the lower limestone as the Lower or Blue Limestone.

a few small lumps of limestone (each about 1cm³) (limestone includes chalk). Marble chips will do if no local source of limestone is available; deionised / distilled water; Universal Indicator solution and colour chart; Safety notes. Wear eye protection. Take care when heating as the lumps will become very hot.

The limestones with their age discussed in the chapter are Agob-Dabalan area, Madai, Batu Baturong, Lower Tingkayu River, and other limestone localities in the Segama area. Thin beds of tuffaceous limestone and calcilutite occur in the Agob-Dabalan area of the Segama River of Lahad Datu.

Reservoir rock: A permeable subsurface rock that contains petroleum. Must be both porous and permeable.

Reservoir Rock & Source Rock Types: Classification

Bioclastic and skeletal limestones are fine- to coarse-grained accumulations of a wider variety of shell fragments and fossils. Chalk is a very fine-grained bioclastic limestone composed of accumulations of skeletal debris from tiny marine organisms that drifted down to the ocean floor.
