PERSUASIVE DEVICES: ETHOS, LOGOS, PATHOS The modes of persuasion are devices in rhetoric that classify the speaker's appeal to the audience. They are: ethos logos, and pathos. Aristotle's On Rhetoric describes the modes of persuasion thus:

PERSUASIVE DEVICES: ETHOS, LOGOS, PATHOS

In contrast to pathos, which appeals to the listener's emotions, logos appeals to the audience's sense of reason, while ethos appeals to the audience based on the speaker's authority. Although Aristotle developed the concept of pathos in the context of oratory and speechmaking, authors, poets, and advertisers also use pathos frequently.

Pathos - Definition and Examples | LitCharts

Let's dig into pathos. Pathos. Your logical argument will be that much more persuasive if it's wrapped up with a good dose of emotion. Because of the way we use the word pathos in the modern world, you may be thinking of something dramatic and sad. But pathos is more nuanced than that; it can be humor, love, patriotism, or any emotional response.

Ethos, Logos and Pathos: The Structure of a Great Speech

For example, if the audience is composed of well educated and high ranked people, maybe ethos and logo come before the pathos; however, in other situations, for example talking for younger audience, the pathos outweigh the other two.

RHETORICAL ANALYSIS SAMPLE ESSAY

Pathos works best with techniques like narration, description, juxtaposition, and artful repetition. Pathos makes effective "hooks" (exciting introductions that involve readers with an argument) or powerful conclusions that wrap up an argument. Pathos ensures that readers are involved in the argument; it appeals to the human love of storytelling and detail.
