Adenosine potentially plays a critical role in minimizing ischemia-reperfusion (IR) injury inasmuch as it is known to confer protection against IR in the lungs, heart, liver, and

Additive protection against lung ischemia-reperfusion

Thus, methods and agents to provide protection against myocardial ischemia and to avoid post ischemic dysfunction are needed. SUMMARY OF THE INVENTION The invention is directed to agents and a method of using the agents to reduce the injury associated with ischemia and reperfusion of organs such as the heart.

Introduction. Cardiovascular diseases are a global cause of mortality, and acute myocardial infarction (AMI) affects >1.5 million people in the United States annually (). The effects of AMI are usually attributable to the detrimental effects of acute myocardial ischemia-reperfusion injury.

SIRT1 confers protection against ischemia/reperfusion

The effective CPR along with protection against ischemia-reperfusion injury in the vital organs is the key factor in survival from prolonged cardiac arrest. Uninterrupted open-chest cardiac massage was performed for the reported patient.

Introduction. Ischemic peripheral neuropathy is an occlusive vascular disease. 1 Neurological diseases, such as cerebral arterial thrombosis, Alzheimer's disease and Parkinson's disease, have become a major concern of human health worldwide. 2 A series of endogenous injuries are caused when blood is restored and perfused posterior to the ischemia, that is, the cerebral ischemia/reperfusion ...

The phenomenon of ischemic preconditioning has been recognized as one of the most potent mechanisms to protect against myocardial ischemic injury. In experimental animals and humans, a brief period of ischemia has been shown to protect the heart from more prolonged episodes of ischemia, reducing ...

Ischemic preconditioning (IPC) is an innate mechanism that protects tissues from injury during ischemia and subsequent reperfusion (ischemia-reperfusion [IR] injury) ().Preconditioning is initiated by brief, nonlethal periods of ischemia, and provides local tissue protection from the effects of further prolonged episodes of ischemia.
