Chapter 8 Composition and Abundance of Tree Regeneration

Overall, the ecological outcomes of natural regeneration and restoration plantations were markedly different. SGe forests showed higher abundance of large (DBH > 20 cm) nonnative species, of which 98% were resprouting Eucalyptus trees, than SGp and PL, and higher total aboveground biomass; however, aboveground biomass of native species was higher in PL than in SGe.

agencies. This restoration strategy, however, failed to fully address the projected effects of climate change on whitebark pine restoration efforts and existing populations. In this report, we present guidelines for restoring whitebark pine under future climates using the rangewide restoration strategy structure.
