boat. Suppose the boat needs to reach a destination which is directly north. What values of θ and ϕ will enable the boat to reach its destination in the shortest amount of time? Let the force of the wind on the sails be equal to F . Some of this force will act parallel to the sail and some will act perpendicular to the sail.

fastest it can sail when the angle of the sail with the direction of the wind is θ and with the axis of the boat (i.e., the course) is ϕ ? (In this auxiliary problem the direction of the wind is not specified.) Let P be the pressure of the wind on the sail when the sail is perpendicular to the wind. If the sail angle with the bearing of the wind is θ , then the wind pressure $P \cos \theta$ on the sail is smaller.

The 3'-untranslated region (UTR) of mRNA is crucial for posttranscriptional regulation. In this issue, Vasudevan and Steitz (2007) report a new function for AGO2 and FXR1—two proteins that have been linked to the regulation of microRNAs and translation repression.
