semantics and Pustejovsky's generative lexicon. Finally, I would like to argue in favor of a particular account of the division of labor between lexical semantics and pragmatics. This account combines the idea of (radical) semantic underspecification in the lexicon with a theory of pragmatic strengthening (based on conversational implicatures).

The lexicon is built, from individual words, and 2-word and 3-word terms from the training data. The lexicon is best characterized by Bergler's (1995) layered lexicon. Concept grammar rules are built by mapping concepts from the lexicon onto the concept-structure patterns present in a set of training responses.
