5) Expect more robo-journalism, but know that human relationships and storytelling still matter. 6) More journalists will need to study social science and statistics. 7) Data journalism will be held to higher standards for accuracy and corrections. 8) Competency in security and data protection will become more important.

The Art and Science of Data-driven Journalism

It was the time of the flatbed press, the required double major and no real journalism courses until sophomore year. In my Student career, I served as reporter, copy editor, night editor, associate editor, managing editor and editor of the commencement edition, as well as paid proofreader, progressively from 1958 through 1961.
