To conclude, the spectral transmission of the human crystalline lens of adult and elderly humans is very variable, and it is impossible to establish a good correlation between age and spectral transmission because other parameters are involved in the spectral transmission variations.

AbstractEvaluation and control of respirable crystalline silica (RCS) exposures are critical components of an effective mine industrial hygiene program. To provide more timely exposure data in the field, an end-of-shift Fourier transform infrared (FT-IR) spectrometry method has been developed for evaluation of direct-on-filter RCS.
