This curse opens the way for a company (a host) of demon spirits to invade, making deliverance more difficult. In addition to the numerous demons which flood in as a result of the curse, the vagabond also picks up a great many spirits in the course of his wanderings. As a bird that wandereth from her nest, so is a man that wandereth from his place.

The liability to the curse which is incurred by all who look to the Law for justification is removed from those who are united by faith to Christ. For Christ took on himself the curse which the Law pronounces on the law-breaker: he "has redeemed us from the curse of the law by becoming a curse on our behalf" (Gal. 3.13).
