In contrast to the human, mouse CD10 is absent from B cells, T cells, and granulocytes, but the expression pattern is similar to the human on bone marrow stromal cells and nonlymphoid tissues. CD10 is a member of a group of type II membrane metalloproteases that includes the leucocyte antigens CD13, CD26, CD73, and BP-1.

Background: Human leukocyte antigen class I (HLA-I) molecules play important roles in regulating immune responses. Loss or reduction of HLA-I expression has been shown to be associated with prognosis in several cancers. Regulatory T-cells (Tregs) also play critical functions in immune response regulation.

HLA Class I Antigens The cell surface glycopeptide antigens of the HLA-A, -B and -C series are called HLA Class I antigens (Roitt et al. 1998). A listing of the currently recognized HLA Class I antigens are expressed on the surface of most nucleated cells of the body.
