The Wood of Suicides features the pursuit and seduction of a middle-aged high school English teacher by a 17-year-old student with father issues. Those that like a more literary read with plenty of poetry, slower moving relationships and psychological character studies will enjoy it.

The Wood of Suicides by Laura Elizabeth Woollett

The Wood of Suicides takes its title from Canto XIII of Dante's Inferno, which describes a tortured wood where suicides are encased in bark. It also borrows heavily from the myth of Apollo and Daphne, referencing it explicitly at several points. Reception. The Wood of Suicides has received mixed to positive reviews.

The Wood of Suicides - Wikipedia

Harwood et al 5 studied bereavement following suicide and other causes of death in elderly patients using the Grief Experience Scale and the Montgomery-Åsberg Depression Rating Scale. Although there was no difference in depression scores between the 2 groups, ratings for stigmatization, shame, and a sense of rejection were significantly different in those bereaved by suicide, suggesting that these areas should specifically be addressed in therapy.
