This was the successor to Angus, the 35 mm camera system. Now, with ARGO, instead of waiting 24 h to get the underwater sled back and process the images to see what was there at great depths, one could see in real time, albeit not with great resolution, an image of the bottom (Harris and Ballard, 1986). This permitted immediate reaction and greatly optimized adaptive search.

The sea. I could fill a volume simply with my word-pictures of it. I would certainly like to write some sustained account of my surroundings, its flora and fauna. This could be of some interest, if I persevered, even though I am no White of Selborne. From my sea-facing window at this moment I can see three
